YouTube and Zoom to record acts of worship

Using Facebook, YouTube and Zoom

With coronavirus closing buildings and restricting others, churches are turning to digital means to offer acts of worship. This guide focuses on recording and broadcasting acts of worship and Bible studies on Facebook Live, YouTube and Zoom.

Copyright

Copyright law must be followed when livestreaming and recording your services. CCLI, whose website can be found at www.bit.ly/2UcAnOG, offers many church licences and PRS for Music, <http://bit.ly/2J5VrBr>, offers additional licences options for music to be broadcast. The CCLI website has a healthcheck page which asks what you want to do, and what licences you need for that activity: www.bit.ly/2Qnk1QU. It is complex at times, but you don't want to break the law, even in times of crisis. You can also get a One License (an American company which operates in the UK) which bought Calamus in 2019. www.onelicense.net/

Platforms

Choose from Facebook, YouTube or Zoom. Others are available, but these are used by billions of people around the world and very easy to use.

Audience

Ask your members what platform they prefer to use. Do they mostly use Facebook, and/or watch films on YouTube? That will help shape your decision about which platform is best for your church.

Equipment

You will need a tripod, and/or a mobile phone holder attached to a gimbel, if you are wanting to use your phone to pan around the church. Remember that your arm will get tired if holding a phone or camera attached to a laptop for a length of time!

Mobile phone microphones aren't the best and so it's worth investing £30 in a microphone that can plug into your phone or device that can be placed closely to the person or people speaking. It's also best to get all those taking part to use central point, such as the same lectern, to save having to move the microphone around during the recording or broadcast.

What to do if using Facebook

Anyone with a smartphone and the Facebook app can click Live when creating a new post and be broadcasting in less than a minute. The first thing to do is to practice. Don't make 10.29am the first time you've tried using Facebook Live when the Bible study starts at 10.30! Have a go – you can always delete any accidental live recordings.

When you press Live,
you may see yourself!

Turn your phone 90° so it's horizontal rather than vertical. Imagine your phone as a small TV and record your service this way so that it's easier for people to watch.

You also see some bright graphics across the bottom of the screen. Choose Live Video.

Description

You can add a description by tapping the area

Once you've logged into your account, press the video icon and select the Record button. (The Go Live option still appears, which is odd seeing as you've logged in and as soon as you press Go Live, you get a message saying that you can't!).

Once you press Record, you'll see a camera switch icon, for you to change the camera you're using, a big red record button and a stopwatch at the top of the screen. When ready, press the red button.

Once you're recording is over, YouTube will quickly run through the film, and you have the option to trim it. For example, if you want to delete the first few seconds or last few, then you can drag the left or right side of the blue box on the bottom of your film and remove. A white pair of scissors underneath the film signifies that you're in the edit mode. Please test this out before using it on a film you want to keep. You could remove something you don't want to!

Enhance

If you want to enhance your recording, press the magic wand icon, to the right of the scissors, and select one of the options to age or enhance your film. Swipe left to see the full range of options. If you try a few and don't want to change it, swipe right and select Normal.

Click the blue NEXT in the top right of the screen and you'll then be asked to add a title, description, privacy options: Public means you don't mind who sees it, Unlisted means only those with the web address of the film can view it, and Private means only you can view it.

This is better if you intend to amend the video, but remember to change the setting back once you've finished editing it. You can access these options by pressing Public, which is the default option. You can also add a location, which is good if it's a film from your church as that will help the church's search engine rankings.

Then click Upload and YouTube will process the film. This may take a few minutes depending on Wifi or 3G/4G/5G signal.

Once uploaded, you can see it by pressing your initial in the top right corner, and selecting Your Channel. Once you see the video, press the three vertical dots to the right of the title of the film, where you can share, download, or delete it.
